

The use of power-lines to transmit broadband signals is both unnecessary and a potential for disaster. No matter how limited a radio signal's power, it still radiates outward from whatever the source and unless the power companies (who have enough problems with their structure) are willing to shield all of their lines, then there is bound to be unwanted, read unwarranted, interference.